Bunubu and the Buried Birthday

When plans go wrong, creativity and teamwork can turn mistakes into something wo

One morning, Bunubu heard excited whispers coming from the tunnel beneath the berry bush.

His underground friends were planning a surprise birthday party for Milo Mole.

'We need balloons, banners, and birthday snacks!'
said Daisy Worm. Everyone hurried to help.

But each time they hung a decoration, someone dug a new tunnel and buried it by accident.

The paper flowers disappeared under soft soil. The ribbon banner got covered by pebbles. Even the party hats vanished into a fresh dirt pile.

Bunubu scratched his head. 'Maybe underground parties need underground decorations,' he said.

So they made decorations that belonged in the soil: glowing pebble lanterns, root streamers, and carrot-candle cakes.

They tucked tiny flower flags into the tunnel walls and shaped the dirt piles into birthday mountains.

When Milo Mole arrived, everyone shouted, 'Surprise!' The whole tunnel sparkled like a birthday cave.

Milo laughed with joy. It was the best buried birthday ever, and Bunubu learned that even mistakes can become part of the celebration.
