Bunubu and the Buried Button

Small discoveries can lead to big adventures when curiosity and teamwork come to

One bright morning, Bunubu was digging a little garden patch beside his burrow.

Clink! His small shovel tapped something hidden in the dirt. Bunubu brushed away the soil and found a shiny red button.

The button was round, smooth, and very mysterious. A tiny label beside it read: Press for a Spin.

Bunubu pressed the button. Suddenly, the ground hummed, and a secret trapdoor opened beneath a patch of moss.

Down below was a tiny underground carousel with acorn seats, leaf flags, and pebble ponies.

A proud ant named Captain Antenna marched forward. 'Welcome!' he said. 'Our carousel has been waiting for someone to start it.'

Hundreds of ants hurried into place, pushing tiny gears and turning little wooden wheels.

The carousel began to spin gently. Bunubu climbed onto an acorn seat while tunnel friends cheered and hopped aboard.

Around and around they went, past glowing mushrooms, sparkling stones, and laughing ants who kept the ride moving.

When the ride ended, Bunubu thanked the ant engineers. From then on, the shiny red button became the happiest secret in the garden.
