Bunubu and the Burrow Bedtime Parade

Small acts of kindness and friendship can make every day end happily.

As the stars twinkled above the forest, Bunubu put on his pajamas and got ready for bed.

Just then, Pip the Mouse knocked on the burrow door. 'Goodnight, Bunubu!' he squeaked.

A moment later, Molly Mole arrived to say goodnight too. Then came a beetle, a worm, and two sleepy crickets.

Soon a long line of underground creatures stretched through the tunnels, all waiting to wish Bunubu sweet dreams.

The line became so long that it curled around mushroom corners and looped beneath root bridges.

As everyone waited, they began yawning. One yawn led to another until the whole tunnel echoed with sleepy sounds.

A cricket softly played a bedtime tune, and the waiting creatures started marching very slowly through the tunnels.

Before long, the line turned into a gentle bedtime parade filled with lantern fireflies and quiet goodnight songs.

One by one, the creatures waved, whispered goodnight, and headed home to their cozy nests.

At last, Bunubu climbed into bed. As he drifted to sleep, he smiled, knowing he had the kindest friends in the whole underground world.
