Bunubu and the Carrot Crystal Cave
A tiny truthful adventure with humming orange crystals.

A Spark in the Burrow

Bunubu was packing crumbs for a very small picnic.
Then his carrot basket began to glow.
One orange root shimmered like it had swallowed a sunrise.

The Root Rolls Away

The sparkling root rolled out the door.
Bunubu blinked twice.
Then he buttoned his slicker and followed it down
the mossy path.

A Door in the Hill

The root stopped beside a hill with a tiny crack.
Hummmm.
The crack widened into a cave just big enough for one brave bunny.

Carrot-Shaped Crystals

Inside, the cave twinkled orange and gold.
Crystals grew from the walls like carrots made of sunset.
When Bunubu whispered, “Wow,” the crystals
hummed softly.

Pebbletoe Hears a Hum

A tiny mole peeked from behind a stone.
“I am not hiding,” said the mole.
The crystals stayed quiet. The mole sighed. “Fine.
I am hiding a little.”

The Truthy Tune

Bunubu smiled. “Maybe these crystals hum for true things.”

“I love caves,” said Pebbletoe. No hum.

“I love caves when someone kind is with me,” he tried. Hummmmmmm.

A Not-Quite-True Shortcut

A tunnel split into three little paths.
Pebbletoe pointed left. “That way is definitely safe.”
The crystals went plink-plonk and turned very dim.

Bunubu Tells His Truth

Bunubu held his knapsack tight.
“I am brave,” he said. The crystals only flickered.
Then he whispered, “I am a little scared, and I am still going.” The cave sang bright and warm.

The Humming Door

The brightest crystal opened a tiny door of light.
Inside sat one pebble-sized carrot crystal.
Pebbletoe said, “It wants to come home with the honest bunny.”

Back Before Tea

Bunubu and Pebbletoe followed the hum back out.
At the burrow, Bunubu set the tiny crystal by his teacup.
Whenever he told the truth, it hummed like a happy bee.
