Bunubu and the Clover Compass
A kind heart can guide us toward people who need help.

One morning, Bunubu found a tiny compass resting on his doorstep. Its four points were made of soft green clover leaves.

A note beside it read: This compass does not point north. It points toward someone who needs help.

The clover leaves began to wiggle and pointed toward the garden puddle.

There, Bunubu found Nora Newt stuck on a slippery stone. Bunubu placed a leaf bridge across the puddle and helped her safely across.

The compass spun again and pointed beneath a berry bush, where Pip Mouse was searching sadly for his lost lunch basket.

Bunubu followed tiny crumbs through the grass and found the basket tucked behind a mushroom.

Next, the compass shimmered and pointed into a dark tunnel.

Inside, Luma Firefly was looking for her glow-lantern. Bunubu helped her find it hanging from a root like a tiny moon.

By sunset, Bunubu was tired but happy. The clover compass rested quietly in his paw, glowing with gentle green light.

Bunubu placed the compass beside his bed, ready for tomorrow. He knew that wherever kindness was needed, the clover leaves would show the way.
