Bunubu and the Cricket Who Couldn't Chirp

Everyone has unique talents, and sometimes what seems like a problem can become

As sunset painted the sky orange and pink, Bunubu followed the sound of crickets practicing for the Evening Concert.

Among the singers was a young cricket named Chippy. Every time Chippy tried to chirp, a little hiccup popped out instead.

Hic! Hic! Hic! The other crickets sang beautiful notes while Chippy looked sadly at the ground.

Bunubu sat beside Chippy. 'Maybe your sound is special,' he said. 'Let's find out what it can do.'

Together they tried singing near mushrooms, pebbles, and hollow roots. Each hiccup made a different funny echo.

Near a crystal stone, Chippy's hiccup sounded like a tiny drumbeat. Tap-hic! Tap-hic!

Maestro Cricket listened carefully. 'That isn't a mistake,' he said. 'That's rhythm!'

The Cricket Choir practiced again, using Chippy's hiccup-beat to help everyone keep perfect time.

When the Evening Concert began, the audience clapped along to Chippy's cheerful hiccup rhythm.

The concert was a wonderful success. Chippy smiled proudly, knowing that being different had made the music even better.
