Bunubu and the Giggle Roots

Understanding how others feel can help solve problems in kind and creative ways.

One morning, Bunubu stepped out of bed and heard a strange sound beneath his feet. Hee-hee-hee!

The roots under his burrow were giggling. Every time someone stepped on them, they burst into laughter.

Soon the whole tunnel system was filled with giggles, chuckles, and snorts.

Molly Mole tried tiptoeing to work, but the roots laughed so hard they shook little pebbles from the ceiling.

The underground creatures could not sneak, tiptoe, or walk quietly anywhere.

Bunubu knelt beside a root and listened carefully.
Between giggles, it squeaked, 'That tickles!'

The roots explained that spring rain had made them extra ticklish. Every footstep felt like a feather.

Bunubu had an idea. The creatures gathered soft moss and laid it over the roots like cozy blankets.

The moss cushions stopped the tickling. The roots relaxed and let out happy little sighs instead of loud giggles.

From then on, the tunnels were peaceful again.
Sometimes the roots still giggled a tiny bit, but only when someone told a really funny joke.
