Making Better Rainbows

The Big Assignment

Bunubu and Nimbu sat together in the hollow-log classroom.

Their teacher gave them a giant blank cardboard sheet.

“Today, you will paint a map of the forest together!” she smiled.

I Can Do It All!

Nimbu's gold lightning bolt gave a nervous spark.
"I want to draw the trees, the rivers, and the mountains all by myself!" he huffed.
He pulled the giant poster away from Bunubu,
puffing his yellow cheeks.

The Busy Little Cloud

Nimbu grabbed three crayons at once.
He scribbled left, he scribbled right, rushing as fast as he could.
But a group project is a very big job for one tiny cloud toddler.

The Project Storm

Nimbu's neon-yellow mist began to swirl and spin. He got so worried about finishing that his watery blue eyes filled up with tears. Rumble, rumble, drip-drop! A little rainstorm broke out right over the desk!

Soggy Colors

“Oh no!” Nimbu cried.
The fresh paint ran. The crayon lines began to slide and smear.
His beautiful project was turning into a big, soggy
puddle.

The Slicker to the Rescue

Bunubu didn't get mad. He just smiled his gentle bunny smile.

He unbuttoned his sky-blue rain slicker and held it over the poster like an umbrella.

“It’s okay,” Bunubu said. “My hat is waterproof, and so is my heart.”

A Helping Paw

Bunubu opened his leather knapsack and pulled out a clean sponge.
He gently patted away the extra puddles.
“If we paint together,” Bunubu whispered, “we can fix any mistake.”

Mixing the Current

Bunubu dipped his paintbrush in blue. Nimbu added a warm yellow swirl.
Where the water met the colors, something magical happened.
The wet streaks didn't look like a mess anymore.
They looked like a beautiful, bright path.
