Bunubu and the Lantern Fireflies

You do not have to be the brightest to make a big difference. Courage begins wit

Every night, when the forest grew sleepy, tiny lights twinkled beneath the ground. They were the Lantern Fireflies, lighting the tunnels for everyone.

Bunubu was invited to join them for one special evening. 'Hold this little lantern leaf,' said Captain Flicker. 'Tonight, we glow together!'

The fireflies floated through the tunnels, shining gold and green. But one small firefly named Luma stayed behind a pebble.

'I want to help,' whispered Luma, 'but I am afraid my glow will be too dim.'

Bunubu sat beside Luma. 'Even a tiny glow can help someone find the way,' he said gently.

Just then, a family of beetles called from a dark tunnel. Their path had become too shadowy to see.

Luma took a deep breath. First came one tiny sparkle. Then another. Soon, Luma made a soft, warm glow.

The beetles cheered as Luma's gentle light showed them the safe path home.

Captain Flicker smiled proudly. 'A brave glow is not always the biggest glow. Sometimes it is the one that shines when someone needs it most.'

From then on, Luma helped light the tunnels every night. Bunubu waved his lantern leaf, happy to know that even the smallest light could make the underground world feel bright.
