Bunubu and the Mossy Tortoise Teacher
Learning new skills helps us explore the world with confidence.

One morning, Bunubu found a classroom tucked beneath a tree root. A sign read: Underground Map-Reading Lessons Today.

Inside sat Professor Mossback, a wise tortoise with moss, clovers, and tiny flowers growing on his shell.

'Welcome, Bunubu,' said Professor Mossback. 'A good map is like a quiet friend. It helps you find the way.'

The professor unrolled a map of tunnels, roots, pebble paths, and hidden mushroom doors.

Bunubu learned that dotted lines meant small tunnels, blue squiggles meant underground streams, and little leaf marks meant safe resting spots.

Then Professor Mossback gave the students a challenge: find the secret clover cave using only the map.

Bunubu followed the dotted tunnel, crossed the blue squiggle stream, and stopped at two paths shaped like a Y.

He checked the map carefully and noticed a tiny flower symbol. It matched the flowers on Professor Mossback's shell.

Bunubu chose the flower path and found the secret clover cave glowing softly with green light.

Professor Mossback smiled proudly. Bunubu had learned that maps are not just drawings. They are clues, stories, and helpers for every adventure.
