Bunubu and the Mud Pie Bakery

A good friend helps everyone feel included by finding what works for each person

One morning, Bunubu smelled something earthy and warm coming from a tunnel near the garden.

Inside the tunnel, a family of moles was opening a bakery with a tiny sign that read: Mud Pie Bakery.

Molly Mole proudly showed Bunubu the first batch of pies. They were round, squishy, and made of real mud.

Bunubu took one careful sniff. 'That is very muddy,' he said politely.

The forest animals came to try the pies, but most of them made funny faces. Only the worms cheered, 'Delicious!'

The moles felt worried. 'We wanted everyone to enjoy our bakery,' said Molly.

Bunubu had an idea. 'Maybe you can make two kinds of pies: mud pies for worms and sweet pies for everyone else.'

Together they baked berry pies, carrot pies, and soft mushroom pies, while keeping a special mud pie menu for the worms.

Soon the bakery was full of happy customers.
Worms slurped mud pies, rabbits munched carrot pies, and beetles shared berry crumbs.

Molly Mole smiled proudly. The Mud Pie Bakery became famous for having something tasty for everyone, even the mud-loving worms.
