Bunubu and the Pebble Piano

When we use our talents thoughtfully, we can bring joy without disturbing others

One quiet afternoon, Bunubu found a tiny piano hidden beneath a curtain of roots.

The piano keys were not made of ivory or wood.
They were smooth, shiny pebbles in every shade of gray, brown, and blue.

Bunubu gently pressed one pebble key. Plink! A soft note echoed through the tunnel.

From behind a mushroom, Snoozy Mole popped up with a yawn. 'Was that my morning bell?' he asked.

Bunubu pressed another pebble. Plonk! A beetle sleeping in a teacup woke with a wiggle. 'Is it snack time already?'

Then Bunubu tried a tiny blue pebble. Pling!
Dreamy Frog opened one eye beside the puddle.
'Who called my name?'

Every note woke a different underground animal:
a worm in pajamas, a cricket under a leaf, and even a snail tucked inside a sock.

Bunubu worried he had disturbed everyone, but the animals smiled. 'Those notes sound like a wake-up song,' said Snoozy Mole.

Together, they helped Bunubu play a gentle melody, soft enough for sleepy ears and cheerful enough for dancing toes.

From then on, the Pebble Piano became the tunnel's special morning music. Bunubu played kindly, and every animal woke up with a smile.
