Bunubu and the Silver Spoon Tunnel
Sometimes a small accident can lead to a shining new friendship.

One evening, Bunubu was setting the table when his silver spoon slipped from his paw.

Clink! The spoon bounced across the floor and vanished through a tiny crack near the burrow wall.

Bunubu peeked into the crack and saw a shiny tunnel glowing with soft silver light.

He followed the tunnel down, down, down until he found a group of field mice polishing pebble counters and acorn cupboards.

'Welcome!' squeaked Pip Fieldmouse. 'We are building a moonlight kitchen, and your spoon is perfect for our mixing table.'

The kitchen sparkled with moonbeam windows, mushroom stools, and bowls carved from smooth walnut shells.

Bunubu helped the mice hang lanterns, stack tiny plates, and stir a pot of midnight berry soup with the silver spoon.

When moonlight poured through the tunnel ceiling, the whole kitchen shimmered like a starry night.

The field mice cheered and invited Bunubu to the very first moonlight supper.

Bunubu shared soup, stories, and laughter with his new friends. When he went home, the mice promised to return the spoon after every moonlit feast.
