Bunubu and the Sleeping Seed Dragon
Patience, care, and teamwork help wonderful things grow.

One quiet morning, Bunubu heard a strange sound beneath the garden. Snore-rumble. Snore-rumble. The carrots wiggled with every snore.

Bunubu gently moved aside some soft soil and found a tiny green dragon curled around a round golden seed.

The dragon opened one sleepy eye. 'I am Snorri,' he yawned. 'I am guarding this seed until it is ready to grow.'

Bunubu looked at the seed. It shimmered softly, but it did not sprout. 'What does it need?' Bunubu asked.

'Warmth, water, and a brave little song,' said
Snorri. 'But I keep falling asleep before I can sing
it.'

Bunubu called the garden friends. The beetles carried dewdrops, the worms loosened the soil, and the fireflies warmed the seed with gentle light.

Then Bunubu sang a soft garden song while Snorri hummed along between tiny dragon snores.

The golden seed began to wiggle. A small green sprout peeked out and stretched toward the light.

Snorri smiled proudly. 'It was waiting for friends,' he said. 'Some seeds grow best when everyone helps.'

By sunset, the sprout had opened into a tiny star-shaped flower. Snorri curled beside it for one more nap, and Bunubu promised to visit every day.
