The Great Pebble Parade was about to begin.
Forest animals were gathering with their favorite colorful stones.

Bunubu met a worried snail named Shelly. 'I want to reach the parade on time,' sighed Shelly, 'but every pebble I see needs polishing!'

As they started down the path, Shelly stopped to polish a smooth gray stone until it sparkled.

A few steps later, Shelly found a speckled pebble and polished that one too. The parade drums could already be heard in the distance.

Bunubu had an idea. 'What if we collect the pebbles first and polish them later?'

Shelly liked the plan. Together they placed special pebbles into a little leaf basket and hurried along the trail.

Whenever Shelly wanted to stop, Bunubu gently reminded, 'The parade is waiting for us!'

Soon they reached the Great Pebble Parade just as it was beginning. Music filled the forest and everyone cheered.

Shelly proudly showed the basket of pebbles. After the parade, friends gathered to help polish every single one.

Shelly learned that sometimes finishing an important journey first makes the celebration even sweeter. Bunubu and Shelly spent the rest of the day admiring their sparkling stones.
