Bunubu and the Turnip Treasure Map
Useful things can be the greatest treasures when they help others.

One morning, Bunubu pulled a giant turnip from the garden. It made a soft thunk, then rolled open like a tiny treasure chest.

Inside the hollow turnip was a crinkly map covered in dotted lines and little red X marks.

'A treasure map!' Bunubu cheered. He imagined golden coins, glittery gems, and maybe a crown made of carrots.

Bunubu followed the first X to a patch of soft moss. There were no jewels, only a cozy moss blanket for chilly tunnel travelers.

The second X led to a hidden puddle of clear water. Milo Mole said, 'This will help everyone during dry days.'

The third X pointed to a pile of strong twigs, perfect for fixing a wobbly beetle bridge.

Bunubu scratched his head. 'These treasures are not shiny at all,' he said. 'But they are very helpful.'

The final X led back to the garden, where hungry friends were waiting. Bunubu used the hollow turnip to make a warm soup bowl.

Everyone shared moss blankets, fresh water, fixed bridges, and turnip soup. The forest felt happier than any pile of gold.

Bunubu folded the map carefully and smiled. Now he knew that the best treasures are the ones that help friends when they need them most.
