Bunubu and the Underground Snow Day

Working together and helping others can turn a problem into a wonderful day.

One morning, Bunubu stepped into the tunnels and gasped. Soft white seed fluff floated everywhere like snow.

The fluff drifted through the air, covering roots, pebbles, and mushroom stools in fluffy white blankets.

Molly Mole twirled happily. 'It's an underground snow day!' she cheered.

Soon all the creatures were making fluff piles, fluff angels, and tiny fluff forts.

Bunubu suggested building the biggest snow-bunny the tunnels had ever seen.

Everyone worked together, rolling giant balls of seed fluff and adding pebble eyes and leaf ears.

The moment they finished, the snow-bunny wiggled its nose. 'Achoo!' it sneezed a cloud of fluff into the air.

Each sneeze sent fluffy snow swirling through the tunnels. The creatures laughed as they ducked behind mushrooms.

Bunubu discovered the bunny was tickled by loose fluff near its nose. He gently brushed it away with a feather.

The sneezing stopped, and the snow-bunny smiled. The friends spent the rest of the day playing in the fluffy tunnels and sharing warm berry tea.
