One morning, Bunubu heard a tiny sigh coming from the tunnel path.

It was Wigbert the worm. 'I would like shoes,' he said politely. 'Everyone else has something nice to wear.'

Bunubu smiled. 'Then we will find you shoes!' But Wigbert looked worried. 'How many do I need?'

They visited Cobbler Cricket, who measured Wigbert with a blade of grass and scratched his head.

'One shoe is too few,' said the cricket. 'Four shoes are too many. One hundred shoes would take all week!'

The tunnel friends tried lining up tiny shoes along Wigbert's long wiggly body, but every time he moved, the shoes popped off.

Wigbert giggled as shoes bounced into teacups,
mushroom pots, and one very surprised beetle's hat.

Bunubu thought carefully. 'Maybe you do not need lots of shoes. Maybe you need one special sliding shoe!'

Cobbler Cricket made a soft, smooth slipper shaped like a tiny sled. Wigbert slipped inside and glided happily through the tunnel.

Wigbert loved his new sliding shoe. He did not need to walk like everyone else. He could wiggle, glide, and be perfectly himself.
