Chibub and Bunubu: The Blanket Fort Below
When plans tumble down, imagination can build them into something even better.

One cloudy afternoon, Chibub built the biggest blanket fort his condo had ever seen.

He used cloud-soft blankets, pillow towers, and a bedsheet roof that stretched from chair to chair.

But when Chibub crawled inside, the fort gave a sleepy wobble and collapsed through a tiny tunnel crack.

Down below, Bunubu heard a soft whoosh as blankets, pillows, and cushions floated into his underground hallway.

'This looks like a castle!' Bunubu said, arranging the blankets into tall cozy walls.

Chibub slid down the tunnel after the fort and laughed. Together, he and Bunubu turned the blanket pile into a grand underground castle.

They placed pillow guards at the castle gate, but every guard immediately yawned and flopped over.

'Maybe pillow guards are better at guarding dreams,' said Bunubu. So they moved the sleepy guards to the nap room.

For the gate, Chibub and Bunubu made friendly ribbon bells that jingled whenever guests arrived.

That evening, everyone visited the Blanket Castle Below for stories, snacks, and the softest naps in the tunnels. Chibub and Bunubu agreed it was the coziest castle ever built.
