Chibub and Bunubu: The Carrot That Fell from the Sky
Friendship can grow when two worlds meet each other halfway.

High above the forest, Chibub lived on a soft cloud rooftop where he grew carrot balloons in little sky pots.

One morning, Chibub's biggest carrot balloon tugged at its string. Pop! The knot slipped loose, and the balloon floated away.

Down below, Bunubu was sweeping his cozy underground burrow when something orange and floaty bumped through the ceiling roots.

The carrot balloon landed gently on Bunubu's rug.
A tiny note tied to it read: If found, please return to Chibub in the sky.

Bunubu looked up at the root ceiling. 'The sky is very far away,' he said. 'But I can start by going upward.'

At the same time, Chibub followed a trail of golden balloon dust downward through the clouds and into the forest.

Bunubu carried the carrot balloon through a glowing root tunnel, where roots shimmered like lanterns and whispered, 'Halfway, halfway.'

In the middle of the tunnel, Chibub floated down just as Bunubu hopped up. The sky cherub and the burrow bunny blinked at each other in surprise.

'I think this belongs to you,' said Bunubu. 'And I think I found a new friend,' said Chibub with a smile.

Together they tied the carrot balloon between cloud and burrow, making a bright orange guidepost. From then on, Chibub and Bunubu always knew where to meet: halfway in the glowing root tunnel.
