Chibub and Bunubu: The Elevator Mole
The journey can be just as enjoyable as the destination.

One day, Milo Mole decided that climbing between Bunubu's burrow and Chibub's condo took far too long.

So he built a shiny elevator powered by turnip gears, mushroom springs, and cloud puffs.

Bunubu stepped inside and pressed the button for Chibub's condo.

Ding! The elevator stopped at Worm Floor, where dozens of worms were having a noodle picnic.

Up it went again. Ding! Beetle Floor. Busy beetles climbed aboard carrying tiny suitcases and acorn snacks.

Higher and higher they traveled. Ding! Cloud Floor. A flock of cloud sparrows hopped in and chirped cheerful songs.

Bunubu laughed as the elevator kept stopping at every possible floor between earth and sky.

When Chibub finally joined the ride, the friends counted seven unexpected stops before reaching the top.

Milo Mole added a Fast Trip button for travelers in a hurry, but many creatures preferred the slow ride full of friendly surprises.

From then on, the Elevator Mole's invention became famous. Whether passengers wanted a quick trip or a fun adventure, there was a button for both.
