Chibub and Bunubu: The Firefly Lighthouse

Good ideas work best when we think about how they affect everyone around us.

One evening, Bunubu visited a group of fireflies who were busy building something deep underground.

The fireflies proudly revealed their project: an underground lighthouse made from crystals, roots, and glowing moss.

When the lighthouse switched on, its golden beam shined through tunnels, roots, and tiny cracks in the ground.

The glow traveled higher and higher until it reached Chibub's window above the clouds.

Chibub blinked in surprise. 'That is a very bright light for something underground,' he said.

Then the moon spotted the beam and became confused. 'Who is shining a lighthouse in the sky?' wondered the moon.

The moon followed the beam all the way down and discovered the tiny firefly lighthouse beneath the garden.

The fireflies felt embarrassed. They only wanted to help travelers find their way through the tunnels.

Bunubu and Chibub helped them add crystal shades that guided the light underground while leaving a gentle glow above.

The moon smiled, the fireflies cheered, and the lighthouse became a perfect guide for both tunnel travelers and nighttime dreamers.
