Chibub and Bunubu: The Sleepy Sunflower Tunnel
Friendship can grow in surprising directions and connect different worlds.

One warm morning, Chibub planted a sunflower seed in a pot on his sunny balcony.

But instead of growing up toward the sky, the sunflower gave a sleepy yawn and grew downward.

Down, down, down it stretched, past the balcony floor, through soft soil, and toward Bunubu's underground room.

Bunubu was arranging carrot pillows when a bright yellow sunflower tunnel popped through his ceiling.

'Hello down there!' called Chibub from above. 'My sunflower seems to be visiting you.'

The sunflower tunnel glowed warmly, with soft petals along the walls and sleepy seeds blinking like tiny lanterns.

Chibub climbed down carefully while Bunubu hopped up halfway, and the friends met inside the golden tunnel.

They discovered Sunny the sunflower was tired of reaching only one way. It wanted to connect the bright balcony with the cozy burrow.

Together, Chibub and Bunubu made the tunnel safe with leaf steps, vine handrails, and little resting nooks for sleepy travelers.

From then on, Sunny's yellow tunnel connected sunshine and snuggles, and Chibub and Bunubu could visit each other whenever the sunflower gave a gentle yawn.
