Chibub and Bunubu: The Thunder in the Turnip Patch
Understanding others can turn fear into friendship.

One afternoon, Bunubu was watering his turnip patch when a loud rumble echoed beneath the ground.

'Boom! Grumble! Rumble!' The sound shook tiny pebbles and made the turnip leaves wiggle.

Bunubu's eyes grew wide. 'The sky must be stomping around up there!' he gasped.

He sent a message to Chibub, who floated down from the clouds with a curious smile.

'The sky doesn't stomp,' Chibub said gently. 'Come with me, and we'll find out what is making that noise.'

Together they climbed to a fluffy cloud hill above the garden.

There they found a tiny gray raincloud hiding behind a bigger cloud. Every time it got nervous, its tummy rumbled loudly.

'My name is Rumble,' whispered the shy raincloud. 'I don't mean to make thunder. It just happens when I feel scared.'

Bunubu and Chibub sat with Rumble, told funny stories, and shared cloud cookies until the little raincloud felt brave.

Soon the thunder became soft giggles instead of loud booms. Bunubu learned that scary sounds sometimes come from someone who simply needs a friend.
