

Chibub and the Grumpy Cloud

— A gentle story about naming big feelings and letting them pass. —

A Little Grumble

Chibub woke up to a bright morning. But above his bed floated a little gray cloud. It made a tiny grumble sound.

Drip Drop

Drip, drop, drip. The cloud rained on Chibub's pillow. "That is not very nice," said Chibub.

Breakfast Trouble

The cloud followed him to breakfast. It rumbled over his cereal bowl. Chibub frowned right back at it.

Feeling Grumpy Too

Chibub flapped his wings too fast. His spoon bounced off the table. Now he felt grumpy too.

Fresh Air

Chibub opened the window for fresh air. The cloud floated out beside him. Together, they drifted toward the park.

Splash

At the park, the cloud made a little puddle. Chibub stomped once. Splash! That felt a tiny bit better.

A Name

Chibub looked up at the cloud. “I think you are called Frustrated,” he said. The cloud blinked in surprise.

Breathing Slowly

Chibub smelled a flower slowly. Then he blew out like cooling soup. The cloud became lighter and softer.

Tiny Rainbow

The last raindrop fell. A tiny rainbow curved under the cloud. Chibub smiled. The cloud smiled too.

Goodnight

That night, Chibub tucked himself into bed. The cloud rested quietly by the window. “Grumpy feelings can pass,” whispered Chibub.
