A Wiggly Morning

Chibub woke up to a sound outside his window.
Scratch, scratch, scritchity-scratch!
It was not the wind, and it was not the toaster. The toaster only sneezed on Tuesdays.

The Courtyard Crater

In the courtyard, Chibub found a rabbit digging with tremendous seriousness.
Dirt flew left. Dirt flew right.
One clump landed neatly inside Chibub's pajama pocket.

A Very Important Hole

"Hello," said Chibub. "Are you looking for a carrot?"

Wobblebun shook his fluffy head.

"No, thank you. I am digging to the other side of Earth. I believe they have upside-down lettuce."

Down, Down, Down

Wobblebun dug deeper.
Chibub held a lantern and counted roots.
They passed one lost spoon, two surprised worms,
and a potato wearing what looked like a tiny hat.

The Tickly Middle

At the middle of Earth, everything felt tickly and floaty.

Chibub's halo bobbed like a bubble.

Wobblebun's shovel floated away and bonked a sleepy pebble on the nose.

Pop!

With one last dig, POP!
They tumbled out into a sunny garden on the other side of Earth.
Chibub landed in a teacup. Wobblebun landed in a bowl of peas and looked extremely official.

The Upside-Down Problem

The garden was lovely, but everything was confusing.

The carrots grew sideways. The watering can sang opera.

Worst of all, the lettuce was not upside down. It was just very wrinkly.

The Ridiculous Trip

Wobblebun's ears drooped.
"I dug all this way for silly lettuce."
Chibub patted his muddy paw. "Maybe the best part was not the lettuce. Maybe it was the very ridiculous trip."

The Return Tunnel

They climbed back through the tunnel with souvenirs: one wrinkly lettuce leaf, one singing watering-can note, and the potato's tiny hat. Wobblebun only got stuck twice, which he said was excellent progress.

Bedtime on This Side

That night, Wobblebun slept in a flowerpot beside Chibub's bed.

The tiny hat sat on the windowsill.

And under the blanket, Chibub found one last surprise: a pocket full of dirt and a very small pea.
